

Learning Kanji isn't all about repetition. Writing it and reading it in different ways helps people learn too. The top box is your model box, try to write the kanji as perfectly as possible. In your lower boxes, try to copy that perfect kanji. Below that, I'll ask you to do a few things.

Try to write a perfect looking kanji.
Extra spaces are provided for longer words. You don't need to use all of them

How do you read this kanji? Write it in hiragana.

Can you still write this kanji in hiragana? _____

Can you write this kanji in katakana? _____

Now try writing it smaller

--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--	--

Write a Sentence or two using this kanji

Kanji Play Time:

Can you think of any kanji that look similar? How about one that shares a part of your kanji? Can you draw a picture out of your kanji that gives it more meaning? Do you hate kanji yet? Which kanji is your least favorite and how do you write it? Can you write this kanji backwards? Can you write it with your non-dominant hand? Do you even remember it now that you've read all of this?